Project Details:

Hypothesis: Creative that leverages Roku's brand recognition and streaming leadership will help Roku Ads Manager feel more credible, familiar, and worth trying, driving both upper-funnel interest and lower-funnel action.

Creative Summary This concept uses Roku's existing household recognition to sell its Ads Manager platform. By reframing Roku as not just a place people watch, but a place businesses can advertise, the work turns Roku's familiarity, scale, and leadership into a selling tool across the funnel.

Creative Direction / Notes

Some important notes from the call:

This was flagged as a direct ripoff from vibe.co - fair, additionally Vibe did something recently with gen ai claymation style so the reference images in the deck are not landing.

Client said they felt like our creative was living in a middle space that didn't look totally real, but also didn't look like illustration or genAI. I challenged the idea of which way they wanted to swing and they unanimously agreed that they woudl like to use this as a brand moment to lean more towards the illustrated side.

I'm envisioning this living room scene, looking as if it's an apartment inside of Roku city with the one caveat, we cannot actually use any of the main graphics from the brand kit unless we want this runup like 47 layers of brand approval. So think in the space of creating a flat licing room scene that looks out on Roku city, in silhoette.

Let's lean into the purples but also keep this light.

I personally don't think that the living room table items need to change, but would love to see the brand represented ON the television screen,

Animation direction: Headline mainly plus the TV screen - would be awesome to do some subtle keyframing in the foreground or background to add a layer of quality but I'll leave that up to you
